Dear Wayne:

I did enjoy our visit last week about the current construction market in our area, and expectations for 2001. We do agree that the architect, engineer and contractor work together as a team, to meet the building owners programmed needs. Successful projects result from this approach.

Take the Century High School Renovation and Expansion for example. In addition to completing your basic contract, Edling Electric was called upon to remove hazardous conditions in the aluminum circuitry from the old building after it was discovered. Your company completed the task in the required timeframe for a reasonable cost.

It has been a pleasure to work with competent experienced Contractors such as Edling Electric in make building owners dreams a reality.

Sincerely yours,
